INTRODUCTION

1.1 This interview was conducted to assess the usability and address the requirements of Project ARES. Up to 25 potential users from a wide variety of blocs and national organizations have been selected for this interview, although they specifically requested a non-disclosure agreement (NDA) in order to protect their personal data and identities. With that being said, it would be difficult to provide a comprehensive report on the matter. However, one interviewee has given consent to provide a transcript of the interview, albeit in text form.

The transcript has been provided below.

2.1.2 Transcript

00.31 : Haihai, Marc. Long time no see.

00.50 : Yeah, man. Wie gehts es dir?

01.13 : Ah, nun... Alles ist in Ordnung. The usual. What about you?

01.29 : Alles ist gut. Graduated from the Legion a year ago, I think?

01.40 : Holy [expletive]- are you for real?

01.58 : Hahahaha yes,,

02.10 : Großes Gratulieren, aye. Well, damn..

02.22 : Vielen Dank, mein Freund. So you still haven't joined the Legion or ..?

02.40 : Nah, done scrapped it. Got other plans right now. Long story.

02.55 : Ah crap. Godspeed, buddy.

03.12 : Thanks, fam. So, are you ready for the interview?

03.25 : Yes, sir.

03.30 : Hold on, gimme a sec. Test one, test two. Is my voice coming in?

03.57 : Loud and clear, sergeant.

04.11 : aye-aye, capt. Let's go straight in.

04.21 : Okay, so. State your origin, rank, and position in the military.

04.40 : Marc O. Molinari, Légionnaire Première Année de 1er Régiment Étranger de Génie.

05.15 : Nice. What is the current status for combat readiness of your military?

05.27 : Umm... der Schweiz or the Legion?

05.48 : The Legion.

05. 53 : Oh, our combat readiness is at DEFCON 4.

06.03 : Elaborate.

06.07 : Increased intelligence watch and strengthened security measures. We are at base operational combat-readiness at all times, peace or war.

06.20 : Ahh, I see. Next question. Now, you have a history of active duty and deployment in Nigeria. Can you provide a detailed summary of your personal experiences?

06.31 : I'd rather not, thank you.

06.38 : Yeah, that's completely understandable. A snippet perhaps?

06.49 : You mean when my best friend got his head blown off by a .50 caliber sniper rifle?

07.01 : And got pieces of his brain on your face? Yeah, next question. Moving on...

07.14 : Umm... you sure this is a good idea?

07.25 : Prolly not. But I don't wanna push. So again, next question. Were there moments where you wished you had the right equipment to complete a mission. Like, any mission, to prevent casualties or collateral damages?

08.01 : Yeah, no [expletive], Sherlock. That moment.

08.15 : Right. Elaborate, if I may ask ?

08.34 : If we had the right intel or an early-warning system, we would've had artillery clear the area out before moving in for a sweep. I'd [expletive] take Iron Man to come in at that [expletive] moment.

08.55 : I'm truly sorry, fam.

09.04 : It's okay. Next question please.

09.10 : What technological trends are currently active in your military? Specifically in AI and V., AR, that kinda thing, you know ?

09.33 : Otobreda 127mm adaptive fire-control. It uses C++ like video games. Or probably the IVAS. You know? That Oculus thing?

09.57 : Ring-ding-ding! Bingo!

10.03 : And how do you think it will affect your military, as a whole?

10.19 : I can't say for sure. Will have to wait for the results are out.

10.33 : Are you concerned / worried that robotic soldiers or other autonomous war machines may replace your role and position in the future?

10.55 : Umm... Good question. At the current stage of AI development, no. Not really.

11.10 : Well, it seems we are at the end of our interview.

11.21 : Wait, that's it?

11.29 : Yeah. Hahaha...

11.44 : Hey, by the way. Thank you for reaching out again, yeah?

11.58 : Yeah, man. Of course. Always a pleasure to have you.

12.12 : Alright. So, can I leave?

12.24 : Of course. Thank you too. I'll see you round, mate.

12. 36 : You got it, capt.

12.48 : Alrighty, bye bye!

12. 57 : Bye!
